Human Rights: Their Impact on Your Life

This introductory 90-minute workshop offers students an opportunity to understand their basic rights and, more importantly, how they can use their rights to empower their lives. With a brief history of modern-day human rights from 1945 to today, we explore the philosophy, political will behind UN Conventions and the law that helps support these ideals. Also available as a 120 or 180-minute workshop, the extended versions include the introductory workshop explained above alongside additional content.

The 120-minute workshop offers supplementary time to work interactively on a group project, taking a closer look at specific rights and their coinciding responsibilities.

The 180-minute workshop offers additional research on a topic of interest tailored for each group like environmental rights or the discrimination faced by vulnerable groups in societies. This will include role-play activities which engage students to explore empathy and methods to use when faced with adversity for themselves or others around them.
